jawed and ab used. Plustrators, paragraphers, doggerel poe r. lecturer, actors and comic opera singers have tounted and richeuled him in caricature, skit, sq 1b, panter, jest and joke. Punster, wit and wag, college boy, pulpiteer and society leader have pulled him to pieces, hauled atm over the coals, broken canes over his magnifi ent shoulders and brought him to book before a none too sentent justice. And yet he lives to look down upon his traducers and enemies, and to taunt them by the length and grace of his stride, the size of his girth and the maddening charm of unconscious physical splendor.

All the children on his beat know and like him; all the upstairs girls admire him and he is At, happy, healthy and whole-hearted to a degree. Looked at it with equal scrutlay, it is quite as easy to find good as it is to find evil in man, and twice as comfortable. And what is true of a clars is true of the individual. The moral beauties of the New York police officer may be latent, but they exist, and they come to the surface many more times than the self-loving, fault-finding member of society is aware.

The other morning a street-car bound for the Grand street ferry turned into Delan.ey street with two passengers on board—one inside, and a fat little posice Captain, who wore pink platts in the back of his neck, on t'.e front platform. Idle workmen, and the housewives of all nations busy with Fielr marketing, jostled one another on the crowded sidewalks, but did not attract the attention of the chubby outside passenger. His eyes were in the street, on the kitchen and stable refuse that littered the paving stones and distressed the senses, and I haven't a doubt but he was mentally taking cab for a report to the Health Board. Just in front of No. 29 a reckless Swaubian attempted to cross the street and sached to the left "nder the very noses of the ariver's He did cross, but he didn't sache. There wasn't room for his wagon between the car track and the curbetone, and the sagaclous horse knew it when he stepped up on

she pavement. Without reason or right, the fool ariver leaped to the ground and began kicking the poor animal in the most brutal manner. It tried its b-st to understand what the wretched ignorames was driving at; the nostrils were distended with fear, the flesh quivered from th effects of abuse, and the ill kept body was covered with a cold perspiration. The fat little Police Captain took in the situation at a giance. In an instant he was on the street, the veins in his neck standing out like cables and pumping crimson blocd into the complexion that was pink a moment

Any one could see with half an eye that his blood was up. He was no longer roly-poly, easy going and joily looking. His eyes flashed from the top of his collar; he had suddenly grown a foot in stature; he pulsated with bull-dog courage; his jaws were set and his fats were clinched in a way that gave him the aspect of a man armed to the teeth; he didn't talk much, but he said a great deal, and his voice was like a battle raging.

"Kick him once more and I'll go you two better !" bellowed the little Captain in the swabian's car. "It's my horse," protested the huckster, and I'll do what I like with it." " Not in my presence." thundered the blue-

war-horse. "Put another hand boot on him and I'll wipe up the gutter with That was all, but it made the speaker purple in the face and turned the cowardly owner of the horse white as a ghost. With the humane leading it should have had at first, the poor brute backed out of the enclosure and across to the right of the street, and the awe-inspiring man-a'-arms returned to his place on the car platform. At least five hundred persons witnessed the occurrence and if there had been one liberty-le ing American in the crowd the policema-would have been cheered to the echo; but The other passenger inside raised the change-slide in the car door and pixed hurrah, harran; but the pixeky, dreadful, tender-nearied champion either did not or would not hear.
